The day be-fore the Ju - ly Fair, all Rib-bon men they did pre-pare For miles a - round___ to rake and tear The roy-al town at Gar - bo.

McCaskey mounted on yon hill
He blew his whistle loud and shrill.
“Come on, brave boys, we will slay and kill
All the Protestants at Garbo.”

He scarce had turned his head around
When he received a mortal wound.
His heels went up and his head went down
At the July Fair at Garbo.

The Ribbon men came in a race,
With handkerchief tied round their waist.
Their jackets we did soundly baste
At the July Fair at Garbo.

Note: In 1795 the institution of Orange Lodges sprang up, named for the Prince of Orange. These were Protestants. The Ribbon men, so called, were one of the many Catholic factions that were active at the same time.
